50 Years - Still Striving Together

By Victoria R. Crosby

In 1968 there existed a climate of hate in certain parts of the USA, and we have to wonder, is it that much different today?
Fifty years later how far have we progressed towards the end of human unrest?

As some of us strive for equality, there are others who embrace negativity.
For every step forward there is another step back, as though we are running on a moving track.

If Martin Luther King were with us today what do you think he would have to say of the prejudice towards people who are refugees fleeing from danger in warring countries?

The times we live in are dark indeed So many people who don't have what they need in order to survive, and to merely stay alive.

The basic lessons that all prophets taught was that as human beings we all ought to treat our neighbors with love and care, and to help other people everywhere.

As a minister the Rev. King's philosophy was one of Christian charity.

Racism, bigotry, and homophobia were not the values that Martin Luther King stood for.

But feeding the hungry, helping the poor, building bridges, not walls, and opening every door.
By building people up, not tearing them down, as there is no place for bullying in our town, or for that matter in any place, as we are all part of the human race.
So let us strive for a future that will bring the dreams and visions of the Rev Dr. Martin Luther King
